Dr. Balvinder Shukla, Vice Chancellor, AUUP in her address during inaugural session stressed upon the need for research scholars to work under the guidance of their supervisors in an active manner. She reiterated the need for research to be in sync with the needs of Industry 4.0 and motivated research scholars to work harder and be more dedicated

The potential benefits of action research for innovation & managing innovation is substantially high as it provides closeness to living emergent systems, generates rich insights as well as knowledge for both rigorous theory development and change in practice. An action research study involves a complex collaborative organizational construct for a reflexive and progressive research. Based on this thought first session was designed on theme “Exploring the dynamic environment: Role of research and Innovation in building Organizations and society.

Research journey embody an adaptive approach in tackling problems which are generally characterized by their interconnectedness and emergence. combining different research paradigms such as expert-driven and participant-directed work is certainly not a cake walk. Second session “Looking back to think beyond; Revisiting the research journey for gap identification and quality enhancement” highlighted researchers’ personal journeys as they dealt with the emergent properties of complex problems and participant involvement.

It is imperative for researchers to increase their understanding about plagiarism, copyrights and patents. Drawing upon previously established ideas and values and adding pertinent information in research paper are necessary steps, but these need to be done with caution without falling into the trap of plagiarism The Third session was based upon the theme “Diverse dimensions of Copy rights, Patents and Plagiarism”.

Research is very much like Design thinking. Both disciplines have evolved to cater to the need of innovation and solving problems We empathize, define, ideate prototype and test. On the second day of conclave, the first session was on “Leveraging the Implications of Data analysis in Research: USP of ‘R’ in Research”.

A thesis examiner is an academic who reads the finished thesis, and gives a report recommending a result. examiners give not only a final evaluation of a thesis, but also instruction and advice to improve the thesis and further publications and research. 2nd session of the day was centered around “Analyzing Research Thesis through Examiners Lens: Scope of enhancement for quality research.

Learning outcomes emphasize the application and integration of knowledge another interesting session was designed to deep dive in “Leveraging the building blocks of Quality Research and learning Outcomes”

Quality research paper is a combination of original innovative research and good writing and Selecting the right journal is key in reaching out to the intended audience. A session “ Working towards Quality Research paper writing and subsequent Publications” was premeditated on this notion.
