A rapidly changing climate, eco-systems collapse, and various calls from stakeholders have led to many multinationals putting more focus on discussing or implementing long-term sustainability. As sustainability becomes widespread, an increasing number of businesses across sectors including finance, healthcare, manufacturing, and construction are relying on sustainability managers to untangle complex sustainability issues.

Thanks to huge strides in technology, increasingly reliable renewables and shifting public opinion, many corporations have realized sustainability also means greater efficiency and have therefore turned to renewables to cap prices, guarantee supply security and foster brand love. This has led to an increase in the need for sustainability professionals.

Enroll in the MBA of Future - MBA in Sustainability Management where you'll be exposed to knowledge and skills to develop and evaluate strategies for managing natural resources and natural capital, as well as as knowledge on Sustainable Economic Development.

MBA in Sustainability Management is a two-year postgraduate programme divided into four semesters. The program is designed to educate and prepare students with the knowledge, analytical ability, and management perspectives and skills needed to lead, to motivate and to manage diversified workforce, rapid technological change and competitive marketplace while considering the principles of ethical, legal and corporate governance fundamentals. This will enable students in designing, monitoring and analysing and implementing sustainable business practices related to environment, inclusivity, technology disruptions, certification, compliance and reporting or the challenge of designing sustainable solutions.
