Amity Institute of Behavioral & Allied Sciences (AIBAS), AUMP conducted a workshop on Cognitive Drill Therapy on 11th Nvember 2019 with the auspicious presence of Dr Rakesh Jain, Senior Clinical Psychologist and Faculty from the Institute of Mental Health and Hospital, Agra. The workshop was organized with the objective of equipping the participants with novel perspectives of treatment in dealing with Anxiety Disorders such as Phobias and Obsessive-Compulsive Disorder (OCD).

The course of the workshop was divided into three sections:

- To understand the issues in Phobia and Obsessive-Compulsive Disorder and how to understand them from the patient's perspective
- To learn about the treatment of these conditions using the classical Cognitive and Behavioural Therapies.
- Introduction to Cognitive Drill Therapy (CDT), its uses and new methods associated with CDT in the treatment of Phobias, anxiety and OCD

The workshop benefited 72 parcipants which comprised of students from MPhil Clinical Psychology, U.G and P.G psychology students. There were 2 participants from outside as well. A total of 3 sessions were scheduled and each session lasted for 1.5 hours. Using his enriching clinical experience, Dr Jain, in the initial phase of the workshop, laid out the premise of phobia and OCD by explaining the internal factor of these conditions- which is anxiety. Keeping an interactive approach with the participants he elucidated how anxiety is associated with the fear of consequences or the perception of threat about the future which is irritational in comparison to the actual survival threats. Students learned about the mechanism of fear in phobias using real-life examples initiated by Dr Jain.

In the second phase of the workshop, in order to tackle these fears of uncertainty, Dr Jain comprehensively explained the measure of anxiety in the patient using several means. He then moved to describing how the classical approaches pertaining to behavioural and cognitive therapies have helped overcome these fears observed in the mentioned conditions. Using examples from clinical cases, how to use therapies such as cognitive therapy and behavioural therapies like systematic desensitization are used. Through this, Dr Jain laid down the foundation of Cognitive Drill Therapy and how its origin came to be within his own professional journey.

The third phase of the workshop commenced with elucidation of the usage of techniques that are central to CDT and the knowledge concerning how to use these techniques within therapeutic treatments. Students were enlightened with the ways in which they can learn these techniques by changing the linguistic pattern of their conversation with the patient and by introducing new exercises. To execute this, Dr Jain used his own therapeutic experiences with patients to take the students through the process and finally ended with a message of professional integrity encouraging the participants to learn CDT and use it for the betterment of society.

Questions and answer sessions were open throughout the workshop and Dr Jain humbly encouraged the participants to ask questions and answered their queries with utmost certainty. He also provided live examples of CDT by inviting participants to express their fears and overcome them by using the techniques that are being taught. The workshop proved successful and enlightening for the participants and the faculty with the opportunity to learn novel ideas and methods that lay down the path for advanced system of treatment within clinical psychology

The workshop was inaugurated by Dr. Deepa Pandey, Officiating Head of Institute of AIBAS, Dr. Rajendra Kumar Sharma, Head of Department of Clinical Psychology, the Organizing Committee and the faculty members of AIBAS.
